LOGLINE
One night an elderly woman stumbles upon the dead body of her neighbour. The poacher died a mysterious death. There are traces of roe deer hooves around his house...

SHORT SYNOPSIS
Duszejko, an eccentric retired construction engineer, an astrologist and a vegetarian, lives in a small mountain village on the Czech-Polish border. One day her beloved dogs disappear. A few months later she discovers a dead body of her neighbour, a poacher. The only traces leading to the mysterious death are those of roe deer hooves around the house...

As time goes by, more grisly killings are discovered. The victims, all hunters, belonged to the local elite. The police investigation proves ineffective. Duszejko has her own theory: all murders were committed by wild animals...

LONG SYNOPSIS
Janina Duszejko, an elderly woman who lives alone in the Klodzko Valley, loses her two beloved dogs. Duszejko is a retired engineer, a part-time English teacher and an animal rights defender. She’s an ex-hippy, a vegetarian, an intelligent observer of the world which she tries to understand and respond to in her own language, not always easily understandable to others. Matoga, her long time neighbour and friend, gives the impression of being mysterious and unwilling to reveal his secrets. Dyzio, a talented, young man who decided not to go down the path of a successful international career, working as a computer specialist for the local police instead, could be, by some, maliciously called a loser. Good News, a girl who has a difficult and ambiguous family situation, fighting to regain custody over her brother, and her own dignity, is also close to Duszejko's heart.

When the poacher, Big Foot, dies in mysterious circumstances, Duszejko and Matoga find his body along with what Duszejko sees as clear proof of the victim's crimes – the quartered body of a poached deer. She also notices something that particularly moves her. From that moment Duszejko becomes obsessed with the idea that Big Foot's death could have been the animals' revenge.

It seems that her suspicions are heightened when other macabre crimes are committed. First, near Duszejko's house, the Police Chief is murdered. Then a rich, local fox farm owner, Wnętrzak, dies in a peculiar manner. The official investigation tracks the connection between the victims, clearly showing that they could all be linked to the mafia.

Duszejko is called upon as a witness and during her questioning she tries to convince the rational police officers of her ever weirder theories. They indulge her and are patronizing towards her, treating as a "local, batty, old woman" which hurts Duszejko immensely. Also, her friends treat her fantastical theories with increasing reserve.

In the meantime, Good News, who remained close to Wnętrzak and blackmailed him, draws the attention of the investigators and unsurprisingly becomes a suspect. That’s when the serial murderer strikes again. This time it’s Mayor Wolski – a local, well connected notable and celebrity. As Duszejko was probably the last person to have spoken to the victim, she automatically becomes a suspect and is arrested. After the questioning doesn’t reveal anything new, she is released home.

From this moment on, things start to progress quickly...
DIRECTOR'S NOTE BY AGNIESZKA HOLLAND

Our film could be called: NO COUNTRY FOR OLD WOMEN. The world in which we live in, certainly Poland in which this story takes place, is such a place. The main character of SPOOR – Janina Duszejko (Agnieszka Mandat) is honest, passionate but also mad. Mad with anger, obsessions, love for animals and with compassion for marginalized people. She is full of rebellion and outrage. Her cruel, anarchic revolt is not meant to outrage us. On the contrary – the viewer should identify with her. Is that immoral? Yes but only thanks to extreme provocation (which is often underlined with humour and tenderness) can we uncover the injustice and cruelty of the world that Duszejko inhabits. She and her contemporaries, she and her animals. The protagonist leads us through a landscape in which the beauty of nature and human friendship are mixed with mud, corruption, cruelty, stupidity and blood. SPOOR does not end with a simple moral. The genres are mixed, as are reality and imagination. The audience may come away thinking that it was all just in the mind of Duszejko who suffers from an allergy to light...

DIRECTOR AND WRITER AGNIESZKA HOLLAND

A FAMU (Prague Film School) graduated, Agnieszka Holland started her film career assisting Andrzej Wajda as her mentor and Krzysztof Kieslowski, on the screenplay of his trilogy, THREE COLORS (1993). Spent many years training on set with her mother and other well-known filmmakers. Began her career as a storyboard artist, working on a big Hollywood productions, such as: ROMEO + JULIETTE by Baz Luhrman, or WASHINGTON SQUARE by Agnieszka Holland. Her debut feature film BARK! (2002) was presented at the Sundance Film Festival and other prestigious international festivals in Moscow, Karlovy Vary, Munich. “Variety” listed Kasia Adamik among the season’s most promising young film directors. In 2008 she directed in Poland THE OFFSIDERS, awarded at Camerimage International Film Festival of the Art of Cinematography (Best Polish Film), Polish Film Festival in Gdynia (Audience Award), Polish Film Festival in Chicago (Audience Award), International Film Festival “Tofifest” (Golden Angel for the Best Polish Film). She also co-produces films, among them KARAMAZOVI (2008) by Pert Zelenka. In 2009 Kasia co-directed with Agnieszka Holland TRUE STORY OF JANOŠIK AND UHORCI. From 2008 to 2014 she worked on many TV series. Her next feature film AMOK will come to theatres in the spring 2017.
PRODUCER’S NOTE

The starting point for the production of SPOOR was Agnieszka Holland’s interest in Olga Tokarczuk’s “Drive your Plough Over the Bones of the Dead”, a novel very well known in Poland as well as in many other countries. At the very beginning of the creating process the decision was made to let the novel’s author write the screenplay actively collaborating with film director. Due to a high degree of the project difficulty it required a substantial financing both for the development and the production. At the stage of development finances from the Polish-German Co-development Fund, as well as from the Media Programme were successfully obtained. The long and intensive development period enabled writing of subsequent drafts of the screenplay, doing extensive location scouting and casting. Most of the locations were situated, just like in the novel, in Klodzko Valley.

The next goal was to create the best possible conditions for the film production. We managed to create an international co-production structure which gave us access to the necessary financing. We had a pleasure to co-produce SPOOR with Nutprodukce (Czech Republic), Heimatfilm (Germany), as well as to make use of the abilities and postproduction experience of the Swedish partner the Chimney. Also Slovak Nutprodukcia participated in the co-production. The project has gained considerable support in all the co-producing countries, both from public funds and television stations, as well as gaining the interest of distributors. It was supported by Eurimages.

The action of the film includes all the seasons of the year. We had to divide the shooting period into three parts: spring/summer, autumn and winter. The shooting schedule included 45 shooting days of the 1st unit and over 30 of the 2nd unit, most of them in the Klodzko Valley. Shooting in the tiny towns and villages, in the forests, at the meadows, sometimes at night, especially in the severe winter weather was really challenging for the actors and crew members.

Thanks to the international co-production structure we had the access to the best creative opportunities in all of the countries engaged. Our aim was to make use of the possibilities of each of the co-producing countries that were best for our film: in Czech Republic we made VFX and engaged the Czech animal handler, who prepared and took care for the “animal actors” in SPOOR. There were special Slovak and Czech wild life units which shot the documentary-style footage with participation of wild animals. Music for the film was recorded in Bratislava studios, mixed in Berlin, Swedish Chimney took care for the sound and picture postproduction of the film.
